

Joaquin Alvarado

Institute for Next Generation Internet

Ken Ikeda

Bay Area Video Coalition

Pulling back the Redwood Curtain

The North Coast's Next-Generation Internet Opportunity

Thursday, March 1, 2007

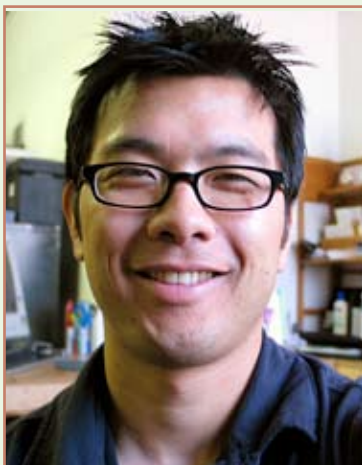

5 – 7 pm

Wharfinger Building - 1 Marina Way, Eureka

The most visionary and best organized communities are leveraging opportunities for next-generation internet. Next-gen internet can open new doors on the North Coast for citizen media participation and economic opportunity. Distance learning, travel-free business meetings, and remote expert medical diagnoses are just a few of the examples that will be discussed in this forum.

Developing next-generation internet infrastructure requires creating partnerships of diverse stakeholders.

Director of the Institute for Next Generation Internet, member of San Francisco's Digital Media Advisory Council, and award winning filmmaker, Joaquin Alvarado is a talented organizer who has brought economic development strategists, educators, artists, and activists together to move this agenda forward in the San Francisco Bay Area. Ken Ikeda, head of Youth Sounds and executive director of the Bay Area Video Coalition, will be co-presenting.

The HSU Office for Economic and Community Development is pleased to host these speakers in a free public workshop. Please RSVP at econdev@humboldt.edu, or 826.3924.

Sponsored in part by a grant from the U.S.
Economic Development administration.

For more information, see:

www.humboldt.edu/econdev